

Copier Company Contracts - The Practical Solution

This means, generally all replacement parts required to truly get your photocopier back up and running, labour costs, genuine branded toner and call out fees are included.

Before buying or leasing your photocopier you will receive a costing for every print you make so you just purchase everything you use on a cost per copy basis, so you'll know at the start that which you are probably be charged without having to be concerned about a huge bill at the conclusion of the month.

The Assurances

Additionally, there are some assurances you obtain when taking out a site contract like copy quality assurance. Which means that if you can find any difficulties with the grade of your print a copier engineer should come and sort the problem out.

Many companies ensure their engineers are manufacturer trained prior to attending any call-outs, thus ensuring quick resolutions to problems. Focus on your machine can also be carried out according to the manufacturer's instructions giving a prolonged life to your photocopier, rather than obtaining the dreaded 'down-time' with work pending but no solution to print it.

Down time can be another factor when looking at something contract as the less time it takes for an engineer to get out to the photocopier, the quicker you're able to utilize the machine to print again. Many good copier companies target a response time for you to breakdown calls, generally around 4 hours maximum. So if your photocopier stops working in the morning they are able to guarantee it to be working again that afternoon.

So What About System Software Upgrades?

One more thing to consider before taking out a service contract will be the system software upgrades you're offered which will be carried out free from charge. A photocopier can be like a computer, over the word of your agreement, which in some instances might be 5 years, software will inevitably need upgrading so many companies try this so the gear stays serviceable, which is beneficial to all or any involved.
