The Ugly Side of Casinos

Tricks on the Customers

Players will always have the tendency to almost win the games. It is because casino machines are designed to give small payouts. Quite generous for some, but it actually gives the casino and extra profit. In the long run, it will be the player's disadvantage. Small wins and near wins give the players a wrong impression about the machines- they are winnable and fair, when in fact they are not. The same is true with card games. Gamblers often think that some games are easy to manipulate and manage.

However, casinos have designed all games to be on their side, and never on the players. These impressions are just to elate and give the players false hope. Almost winning will just keep the player in gambling and make them lose more funds in the long run. As for the winners, players will tend to rejoice about a $200 they won, but they will not tell you that they lost $700 in the process and in the previous weeks. Casinos are really good in making a gambler out of everyone while creating illogical illusions in the minds of their patrons.

They Feed on Addiction

A gambling addict will not be reprimanded inside casinos. Of course, casinos don't give a care on who is already ruining their lives, and who is about to lose his/her entire properties. They only care about what they can get, and they benefit so much from the players' addiction. From these wager devotees, they gain abundantly unlike those who only play on occasional basis.

Tricks on the Government

They said that the prodigious revenues generated from casinos are benefiting the government. This may be true in certain places; however, individuals have postulated that some casinos deprive the government instead. Others refuse to disclose payouts and keep their earnings confidential. Also this has led to a series of liquor stores and cash-for-gold outlets in the nearby areas. So even before luring the players to stay inside the premises, casinos have already thought of enticing potential gamblers by the exterior. This results to the bankruptcy of other local businesses as their patrons have shifted to the blaring and brightening displays of casinos. Government lets other local businesses to suffer while keeping the casinos when in fact the taxes from these casinos are not as significant as those of other legal and upright businesses.

Tricks on the Nearby Communities

The effect of casinos extends up to the nearby communities. It was discovered that real estate properties 10 miles from the casino are burdened by higher rates of home foreclosure. Additionally, they cause economic distress and domestic violence. Casinos significantly reduce the income of its players and consequently the financial stability of the gambler's families. More so is its impact on familial relationships and quality time.

Before, the only ones who get to gamble are from the upper class. But through time, more and more of the middle class, low-income earners, and even retirees have crowded the casinos as well. These classes are said to be more vulnerable to gambling addiction and casinos feed on it atrociously. Because of the seemingly boundless revenues the government is getting from casinos, advocacies against these establishments are shunned; let alone the fact that research on the effects of gambling is dodged by the government as well. Hence, the vulnerable classes have less access on the ill effects of gambling and how it can ruin families terribly. They will then tend to play more without knowing the possible consequences of their obsession.
