A silk pillow case does not cause these problems, as they'll not cause dust or dust mites to gather and thrive within and on the fabric, which inevitably makes them easier to control in terms of cleanliness. When it comes time and energy to wash your pillowcase, you may choose to do so in the sink or as a delicate item in your washing machine.

Your Pillow Case and Your Skin

Did you understand that the traditional cotton pillowcase is causing the skin to dry? It's true. Cotton absorbs lots of the skin's oils, causing dry, crack skin as time passes, leading to increased lines and wrinkles. A silk pillow case does not absorb the skin's sebum, but alternatively, allow your skin layer to retain it's natural moisture. The softness of the silk may also stop you from waking up having an enormous crease quietly of your face. The outcome is skin that's much less dried out, smoother, and because silk allows the skin to put up onto it's natural moisture, additionally it helps to prevent breakouts caused from dryness.

Silk Pillows and Your Hair

A silk pillow case will not destroy your hair like cotton pillowcases will. Maybe you have woke up with hair which was wild and appeared as though it could not be tamed? If so, that's most likely not the entire fault of one's pillowcase, but perhaps a little. Cotton dries out your own hair by sucking out it's natural moisture, leading to dry, frizzy hair that breaks and appears literally lifeless. Silk pillows allows your own hair to simply "be" while you sleep. You'll wake up with less tangles, dryness, and hair that still looks practically the same as the day before.
