Barcelona Festivals

The Carnivals begin in late February, possibly more exciting than from the time being reinstated following the demise of the dictatorship which forbade them. The celebrations continue nightly through March 3, when they celebrate Saint Medir with a cavalcade and singing choirs.

In March, Holy Week begins with a palm fair for Palm Sunday. The festivities of the week are religious and solemn in nature, until Easter Sunday celebrations begin anew. The festivities continue through Easter Monday, which really is a pagan holiday.

The celebrations in honor of Sant Jordi take devote April, in combination with rose and book festivals. Pagan meets religion in these beautiful and sometimes raucous celebrations.

June begins with SONAR, a four-day party with dancing and music every night. That is accompanied by an annual Trade Exhibition and the Corpus Christi celebrations. You can find parades and processions, like the procession of the "giants" and the "Ou com Balla," or the dancing egg. These take place at the fountain of the Cathedral cloister. The end of June is marked with the Eve of Saint Joan, with private and public parties, bonfires in the streets, and fireworks.

The Festival of El Grec begins at the conclusion of June and is marked by a series of theatrical performances, dancing, concerts, and events. You can find multiple events taking place at any given time, along with sporting events and trade shows. In August, the people of Barcelona celebrate the Feast of the Assumption with festivities and parties.

September brings the Festivity of La Merce, the patron saint of Barcelona, which is a time full of dancing and parades. There are sport tournaments, including sailing regattas, judo tournaments, walking races, and swimming competitions. Religions ceremonies and pagan rituals coincide during this period harmoniously.

Santa Lucia begins in December and lasts through Christmas. This season is marked by the annual crib fair which begins in the region of the cathedral. Festivities combine with Christmas traditions to create an interesting marriage of pagan celebrations and religious anticipation. Christmas, itself, is generally celebrated in private homes.

New Years is a huge celebration, in the bars and restaurants, and on the streets. Individuals are clothed and there is a carnival atmosphere. Whilst the clocks strike twelve, the individuals of Barcelona eat twelve grapes in time with each of the chimes.

Arranging a Vacation around the Festivities

Any of these festivals and celebrations may be worth the trip to see and be a part of. Make sure to check the calendar for the season of your trip for specific celebration dates.
