

Business Plan Services - The 5 Key Stages of the Process

This collaboration process will have a different shape depending on the specific firm you are working with, but should include these important stages:

Interview Stage

After an agreement has been signed (and possibly even before) interviewing will occur where the consultant attempts to gather just as much business information directly from the entrepreneurs or managers as possible. If you will find multiple managers or founders, they'll turn to reconcile their different accounts of what the business enterprise is attempting to do and make the team aware of significant divergences.

Research Stage

With the interview information as background, the consultant may now work with a wide selection of resources to get supporting data and statistics for the company plan. This can end up being the basis of the industry/market, customer, and competitive analysis sections of the plan. This is work that may primarily be achieved by the consultant or consultants on their own. However, the client should keep an eye on the method, getting updates on findings at various intervals for them to offer input rather than merely an enormous report at the conclusion of the investigation process.

Strategy Consulting Stage

With a much better idea of industry situation, the consultant is currently in a position to help the client craft a better strategy. Top quality consultants won't simply accept the business's strategy as dictated, but provides their own comprehension of business strategy to the table only at that point. Discussions between both parties will soon be vital that you the process at this stage.

Outlining and Drafting Stage

With strategy and the fundamental information for the company plan now at your fingertips, the consultant can outline the basic business plan. A draft of the plan will next be created which should serve as a spot of additional discussion if necessary.
