Some may say you're setting your standards a little high to even compare St Georges Hall to whatever you would like to build, but by the end of your day, it's your project and you ought to demand the degree of quality that you desire. You will need to know how to start looking for a good builder though and that doesn't mean hanging outside Lime St station, waiting so that you can arrive on the 15.45 from Edge Hill! For lots of people this can be extremely complicated as you can find just a wide variety of Liverpool builders to choose from. But with a little understanding and guidance, it needn't be as frustrating as one thinks, providing a couple of simple steps are taken.

Recommendations

Probably the easiest way to choose your builder by far is by having a personal recommendation with a friend or colleague. If the builder did a good job already for somebody that you realize then this is a good sign that they may do what they say they could do and have a track record where work could be checked. Also ask your friend or colleague if it is OK to go and see the job that the builder did for them. Ensure that you are satisfied with the grade of the task that they carried out for your friend. Don't hesitate to travel to different regions of the town if need be. So whether you've to visit from Toxteth to Maghull to check out a builders work, make that journey to ensure that you can be sure your builder can provide the standard you're after.

Allowing a builder into your home to transport out construction work could be slightly intrusive for lots of people, I am talking about in the end let's face it, if you don't already know just them then they're simply strangers to you. So it's wise to transport out some research to make certain you are getting someone who's honest, trustworthy, reliable and competent.

Professional Trade Unions

In the event that you can't find a buddy or colleague to recommend a good Liverpool builder for your requirements then your next safest method is always to approach an accredited and professional trade union such as The Federation of Master Builders (FMB). The FMB have a Liverpool branch and unions like these, only allow builders to join if they've a good track building record and are fully competent at doing the job or trade they say they can do.

The FMB will use up several references from the builder or even make site inspections to inspect their work. The builder will also need to meet other requirements before membership is granted such as for example supplying professional references from an accountant or local building control officer. A building control officer is the main building regulations team via Liverpool City Council who will inspect construction as it's erected. There are always a choice of Liverpool builders registered with the FMB so you may pick maybe 2 or 3 perhaps and inquire further to come out to meet up you and quote for your project.

Yellow Pages Mersey Directory

The Yellow Pages Mersey Directory is another place to find a builder but they will be less vetted than deciding on one from the FMB. There are lots of reputable Liverpool builders advertising in the Mersey Directory but before instructing someone to focus on your project, you must carry out your own personal reference checks from previous jobs they have completed.
